If you choose to take a course outside your major, you may be required to pay the tuition and fees for that course with your personal funds (cash, check, money order, or credit card). Federal Pell Grant and state HOPE regulations prohibit the college staff from awarding financial aid from these grant programs to cover tuition and fees for a class that is not a part of your program of study. Advisors have the authority to clear you to register for courses outside your program of study, but you must make the final decision to take those courses. You should meet with a financial aid counselor regarding the implications of this decision on your aid award.
